

Four Actions

How YOU Can Fight Climate Change NOW

When we understand how big and destructive runaway climate change is and how quickly it is coming down the pike at us, we want to know, “What can I do now?” Here are four actions you can take right now to make a difference because so many other people are also taking them.

one

Connect with a climate community/organization

- Movement leader Bill McKibben says, “The most important thing an individual can do is be less of an individual and join together with others,” and we agree! Individual actions are important, but together is how we can really change society. Community support is what sustains us, so find people that inspire you and cultivate the joy of taking action as a team.

two

Have lots of Climate Conversations

- Talking about climate change with lots of people can help move climate change action into the Overton Window. Talk is not cheap; it's powerful!
- THIS! offers free Effective Climate Conversations trainings. Get info & sign up here.
- Learn about having group conversations with “The Week” here.

three

Go electric and magnify the Inflation Reduction Act

- Generous tax credits and rebates kicked in on January 1, 2023 for solar, heat pumps, electric vehicles, and more. If we magnify the IRA, it can speed up the transition from deadly fossil fuels to renewable energy and provide lots of jobs across the country. Talk with a contractor, visit auto dealers selling electric vehicles, and tell all your friends and family! You can use this calculator to determine which tax credits you qualify for.

Move Your Money

- Climate-bad banks are financing the fossil fuel development threatening the planet. Align your money with your values and move to a greener institution using our DIY materials, Cohorts, or Office Hours program. The four worst climate-bad banks in the US are Chase, Citibank, Bank of America, and Wells Fargo.
